I never lack hope. Although there are sobering realities we must address, such as the report published by the United Nations earlier this year outlining rates of extinction and loss of biodiversity, I remain rooted in the role the Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden plays in mitigating crises like these.

Hope abounds when I see the progress we are making as a community that plants pollinator gardens in backyards; when I look to the successes of our CREW scientists as they unlock the mysteries of jaguar reproduction; or as I watch us move toward sustainable actions of water and energy conservation that have a positive impact on our neighbors throughout Avondale and beyond.

The Zoo’s greatest strength is our reach. Through our myriad programs we are cultivating passionate advocates willing to take action. It is a myth that saving wildlife or reducing pollution is bad for business. What’s good for business is doing things smarter. That’s how we do it at the Cincinnati Zoo, where every day we make a difference for the animals and plants we love and need.

It’s easy to remain hope-filled here. Our collective actions as a community have secured the title of #1 Zoo and the Greenest Zoo in America. That inspires me and feeds my hope for all that lies ahead. Thank you for being on this journey with us!

Sincerely,

Thane Maynard
Zoo Director
A little over a year ago, our More Home to Roam campaign kicked off with a challenge from Linda and Harry Fath: raise $100 million toward your mission and we will contribute another $50 million. By their incredible generosity, the Faths demonstrated a faith and confidence in our Zoo and the people who make it great every day. In the months that followed, tens of thousands in our community have joined them to help us raise more than 25 million dollars, bringing us a quarter of the way to our goal.

With the faith that others have shown for us comes a responsibility. We can transform our Zoo into a place of wonder for generations to come – to engage people with plants and animals and to foster conservation both in our community and in far off lands. We do not shirk from that responsibility.

As the pages of this annual report reflect, this is an exciting time. Construction is underway on new facilities including Roo Valley set to open next year bringing new levels of engagement to our visitors. We continue to learn and advance the care of our animals across the board, to enhance sustainability of our operations and accessibility to all, and to take our messages of education and conservation ever deeper into our community.

Your continuing support – as member, donor, advocate, cheerleader – is helping shape the future for our Zoo, our animals, and their counterparts in the wild.

We thank you. We could not be where we are today without you.

Sincerely,

W. Stuart Dornette

ANIMAL WELFARE & EXCELLENCE
Referring to an animal’s collective physical, mental, and emotional states over a period of time, animal welfare is measured on a continuum from good to poor and is at the core of everything we do at the Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden. The continuous pursuit of not just good, but optimal animal welfare is how the Zoo defines animal excellence.

Committed to Outstanding Care

The Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden takes a scientific approach to caring for animals. This is done by implementing a holistic and evidence-based approach to understanding and enhancing the lives of animals in the Zoo’s care. With an innovative animal excellence initiative, the Zoo is focusing efforts on ways to best care for animals so they can thrive.

The Cincinnati Zoo defines animal excellence as the continuous pursuit for optimal animal welfare. Combining this new science with the Zoo’s experienced team of expert care staff is the best approach for promoting animal excellence.

A prime example of this symbiotic relationship between science and animal welfare is the story of the Zoo’s little blue penguins. Keepers used science and research along with cutting-edge technology to study the movements of these beloved birds and track their physical activity. Using radio-frequency identification (RFID) technology, keepers were able to use the data collected to change feeding practices in order to promote physical activity, ultimately improving the health of the little blues. Not only are the lives of the Cincinnati Zoo’s little blue penguins improved, but we are sharing this research and information with Zoos across the nation in order to drastically improve the lives of little blue penguins everywhere.

To help ensure optimal animal welfare is being considered, the Zoo’s animal excellence team was an integral part of the design process for new animal habitats and renovations planned as a part of the More Home to Roam initiative. Best practices research for Roo Valley, which will include a new habitat for little blue penguins, included reviewing penguin pool designs that promote swimming behavior and researching how rocky surfaces can promote better foot health in penguins.

This is just the start. The Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden is committed to providing the best experiences to the animals in our care.
Better Homes for Birds

In 2018, hundreds of thousands of people participated in the Year of the Bird to build a better world for birds. The Cincinnati Zoo joined the celebration through multiple efforts, beginning with an extreme makeover to the Wings of the World habitat. The renovations offer visitors the opportunity to observe an amazing diversity of birds from across the globe in an open-air mixed-species aviary while also making connections to our own native bird species. New LED lighting is supplemented with UVA-emitting lights that allow birds to see a whole spectrum of colors and skylights to enhance natural light. Bird-watching tips, seek-and-find opportunities and bird identification activities are featured in games and colorful, Charley Harper inspired signage throughout the building. We did not stop there, though. In the past year we brought bald eagles back to the Zoo, successfully bred and raised Raggiana birds-of-paradise and partnered with Raptor Inc. to assist in recovery of injured and ill raptors. The Zoo hatched two Guam rail chicks with the hope of reintroducing them into their native habitat where they are currently extinct. We championed Lights Out Cincinnati, an initiative spanning across 26 cities committed to helping migratory birds travel safely by asking community members to turn lights off during migration seasons, so birds are not disoriented and drawn to building lights. And, we installed Feather Friendly dot decal patterns on exhibit windows to reduce the number of bird strikes against glass enclosures.

Although the Year of the Bird has come to an end, our efforts to build a better home for birds across the world and right here at home continue. Always.

UC Engineering Project

In 2018, The Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden partnered with the University of Cincinnati to develop an innovative course designed to teach students to understand the needs of animals and create enrichment activities to meet those needs. The student teams had to think outside the box to create unique enrichment items including a self-service shower for rhinoceros hornbills, interactive puzzle feeders for giraffes, and a tube filled with lights and sounds for tigers that is remotely activated by keepers. The opportunity for Zoo staff to collaborate with some of its young neighbors at UC was just as important as the enthusiasm the students brought to the Zoo’s enrichment program.
“We are thrilled Ndume is finally here. We’ve been preparing for his arrival and are ready to offer him an environment, schedule and social status that work for him.” Those were the words Zoo Director, Thane Maynard, was finally able to share on June 14, 2019.

For nearly a year, the Zoo had worked to bring the 38-year-old silverback home to his place of birth – Cincinnati. In 1991, Ndume was loaned to The Gorilla Foundation (TGF) in California to be a social companion for Koko, the gorilla famous for being taught a form of sign language. Upon Koko’s death in June 2018, the Association of Zoos and Aquariums’ (AZA) Gorilla Species Survival Plan® (GSSP) recommended that Ndume be returned to the Cincinnati Zoo.

It took a united front of zoological and animal welfare professionals almost a year to bring Ndume home. Led by Ron Evans, the Zoo’s Curator of Primates, the team showed courageous advocacy, action and tenacity – not surprising for a Zoo with an 88-year history of caring for gorillas.

Arrangements for Ndume’s travel and re-introduction to the Zoo were planned with Ndume in mind. According to Ron, “Gorillas require and desire to be near other gorillas. As with all new gorillas, we want to make sure Ndume is comfortable with his new home, keepers, and routines. Patience is always the key when acclimating new gorillas.”

Today, Ndume is making steady progress in his new home, exploring each of the five different zones in our Gorilla World habitat. We look forward to introducing Ndume to Zoo guests.

From Dan Ashe, President & CEO of the Association of Zoos and Aquariums (AZA):

They say, “If you’re going to talk-the-talk, then be prepared to walk-the-walk.” If you’re like me, many of you may have found yourself in situations where your talk got you into a walk that was longer and harder than expected. The path Cincinnati walked with Ndume was steep, narrow and full of risk. They persisted. My favorite definition of courage is when someone follows their belief and does what they know is right, even when the price may be more than they want to pay.

With Ndume, Cincinnati Zoo showed this kind of courage. They did what they believed to be right for Ndume as an individual gorilla. By doing this, they have enhanced their reputation as a leader in animal welfare.

They deserve our collective applause and admiration.

Thank you Cincinnati Zoo, and welcome home Ndume!
More Home to Roam
In the summer of 2018, we launched our More Home to Roam capital campaign with a goal of $150 million to dramatically transform habitats and expand community and conservation efforts, here and around the world. We are well on our way to reaching the goal!

Better Homes for Them. Better Zoo for You.

It started with eight monkeys, three deer, six raccoons, a hyena, an alligator, a circus elephant and over 400 birds.

Those were the animals that lived at the Cincinnati Zoo when it opened its doors in 1875. We have certainly grown over the years!

For 144 years the Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden’s expertise in animal care, conservation, education, and horticulture has evolved, and our habitats must continue to evolve too. The vision of More Home to Roam is already taking shape. A redesigned entry lends safe, streamlined visitor access and amenities such as additional family style restrooms and a calming room for guests with development disabilities.

Hops, a craft beer garden with local flavors and a multi-tiered deck opened this fall and will offer a treetop view of Roo Valley when it opens in Summer 2020. Featuring a kangaroo walk-about, a new little blue penguin habitat and Klimb, a 60-element, high adventure ropes course.

Future phases of More Home to Roam include additional parking solutions, enhanced visitor experiences, and bigger, more naturalistic spaces for animals. Rhino Reserve will be redesigned to include a larger, mixed species yard, expanded moats and visitor viewing decks. Elephant Trek, the final phase of More Home to Roam, will be nearly five times the size of the current elephant yard and feature naturalistic trees, mud wallows, grasses, pools and streams. As the greenest zoo in the country, the Zoo is also on track to be net zero energy, water and waste by 2025.

More Home to Roam will not only enrich the lives of the Zoo’s animals – and Zoo guests – it also symbolizes another giant leap in the Zoo’s efforts to conserve Earth’s biodiversity and create a world where both people and wildlife can thrive.

Harry and Linda Fath

In June 2018, Cincinnati humanitarians Harry and Linda Fath believed in our vision enough to contribute a record $50 million transformational challenge gift which marked the beginning of the Zoo’s most expansive change to date.

Harry shared, “Linda and I helped launch this campaign because the Zoo is for everybody and it makes Cincinnati a great place for families. We hope that thousands of people will respond to our challenge and help match our gift.”

Campaign Update

At the heart of every great city is a great zoo. At the heart of every great zoo are compassionate, committed citizens who know what zoos mean to the world. Investment in the Zoo is an investment in our planet. As a globally recognized, fierce defender of all manner of wildlife and the environment, the Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden is not only a place to see the wonder, power, and beauty of nature, it’s a place the world trusts to help save it.

The Fath’s challenge gift has inspired thousands of people to give, to the tune of $25 million raised since June 2018. Cincinnati is indeed a Zoo town. We are tremendously grateful!
SERVING COMMUNITY
A key pillar of our mission is “Serving Community” – giving back so others can move forward. From partnering with diverse and economically challenged communities locally to supporting our global neighbors, giving back to help others move forward is a responsibility the Zoo takes seriously.

Access for All

The Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden, in partnership with Cincinnati Children’s Hospital Medical Center (CCHMC), has been working hard to become the most welcoming, accessible, and inclusive Zoo for individuals with developmental disabilities and their families. With a grant from the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS) in 2017, the Zoo has made great progress toward this goal and has hosted two Zoo Access for All Days.

In addition, hundreds of Zoo employees and volunteers have participated in training provided by CCHMC’s Leadership Education in Neurodevelopmental and related Disabilities (LEND) program to learn how to better engage with visitors of all abilities. Our Family Advisory Council has provided guidance leading to the implementation of a variety of supports, including adult-sized changing tables, sensory maps, a skip-the-line rides access pass, social narratives, visual supports, and sensory bags filled with oral motor chewy tubes, fidgets, noise canceling headphones and sunglasses. New sensory gardens are a place to sit when feeling a little overwhelmed, inviting visitors to use their senses to explore carefully curated container gardens. A calming room and a second sensory-friendly, family restroom opened this fall. The Adventure Ropes course scheduled to open in Summer 2020 will have ADA accessible components.

The Zoo is committed to providing all members of our community with the opportunity to make a positive connection to wildlife and wild places. This commitment is emphasized in our vision for the future, and funds raised through our More Home to Roam capital campaign will continue to make the Zoo experience better for everyone.
Community Makeover: Roselawn

For the fifth consecutive year, the Zoo joined forces with the annual Reds Community Makeover project, renovating a neighborhood park at the New Prospect Baptist Church and Summit Center in Roselawn. The 2018 effort involved over 400 volunteers from a variety of local organizations and companies, including the Zoo, P&G, Cincinnati Children’s Hospital Medical Center, Kroger, Interact For Health, GE, Cincinnati Tool Bank and OneSource. The Zoo team coordinated landscaping, construction management, project coordination and maintenance. The finished product was amazing: a new baseball field including infield, dugouts and bleachers; refurbished outdoor recreation areas and green space; upgraded indoor spaces such as the teen center, kitchen and technology center; and a new and improved campground and amphitheater along Mill Creek. The investments in the Roselawn project provide significant and sustainable impact, including reducing operating costs and energy usage and investing in the long-term development of the community and its residents.

The Zoo team was proud to be a part of the annual Reds Community Makeover, making a transformative and sustainable impact on an urban neighborhood and its residents while strengthening local youth baseball and softball programs.

Light Up Avondale

In 2017 and 2018, The Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden was awarded a grant from the Duke Class Benefit Fund to convert the Zoo campus to all LED lighting, including the annual PNC Festival of Lights. That goal has been achieved, and now the Zoo is spreading light and efficiency to the whole neighborhood by providing energy-efficient LED lighting in residences and businesses throughout Avondale. The Light Up Avondale team has transitioned 26 neighborhood businesses to LED lighting, resulting in energy and maintenance savings of over $150,000. The team has also upgraded 65 Avondale homes and hopes to do the same for every house in the neighborhood.
The sight of three flamingos out for a walk down the middle of the Zoo pathway took Katie M. by surprise. A flap of the wings and a sudden loud squawk from one of the flamingos startled her. But what came next surprised her even more – the sound of her ten-month-old laughing for the first time ever. It brought tears to her eyes.

Katie’s son was a patient at Cincinnati Children’s, receiving treatment for glioblastoma. The family was at the Zoo enjoying a brief respite as part of Creature Connections, a collaborative partnership between the Zoo and CCHMC.

The brainchild of Carol Bonner – two-time chair of the SPCA Fur Ball and former Zoofari committee member – the program provides patients and families with one-of-a-kind animal encounters at the Zoo. The human-animal connection creates cherished experiences with lasting memories. Carol partners with Dr. Stella Davies, head of Cincinnati Children’s Division of Bone Marrow Transplantation and Immune Deficiency, to coordinate the encounters.

“Our patients typically remain in the hospital for extended periods,” says Dr. Davies. “Being able to provide these children and families with a few joyful hours to forget about their diagnosis is priceless.”

It all began with Fiona. Just like the rest of the world, so many of the kids were enraptured by the engaging baby hippo.

Carol and Dr. Davies arranged for several patients, along with their families and medical staff, to visit Fiona – who, of course, charmed the children.

“The kids talked about Fiona for weeks,” Carol says. “Actually, no matter what the animal, the kids will bring up their visits all the time.”

Sweet-faced Moe the sloth is also a popular choice to hang with. The Zoo gives each child a stuffed animal, and one little girl now carries her own Moe to cuddle wherever she goes. There’s a three-legged chinchilla named Morgan that kids gravitate toward, too: they find comfort in their shared challenges.
CONSERVATION IN OUR BACK YARD
Conservation is at the core of everything we do. As Zoo Director Thane Maynard states, “Protecting wildlife equals protecting people.” From field projects supporting lion conservation in Kenya and saving sloths in Costa Rica to reforestation with pines and pollinators to the work CREW does to Save Species with Science, the Cincinnati Zoo contributes to conservation efforts far beyond our own backyard.

Plant for Pollinators

The Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden is bringing sustainability to your own back yard!

This year, in partnership with Klosterman Bakery and led by Pollen Nation, a dedicated group of the Zoo’s horticultural champions, the Zoo asked its neighbors in Cincinnati to take the “Plant for Pollinators Challenge.” In March 2019, Pollen Nation’s presenting sponsor and partner, Simple Truth, gave this project wings and helped propel the project further.

Participating in the challenge is as easy as 1, 2, 3: 1) Plan your garden; 2) Choose the best plants with help from the Zoo’s list of best pollinator plants; and 3) Register your garden on our website. Participants also have the option to order a yard sign to promote their pollinator garden. With expertise and support from the Zoo’s award-winning horticulture team, challenge participants can achieve the garden of their dreams while contributing to conservation efforts by providing vital habitat for pollinators.

Initially, the Zoo set out with a lofty goal of registering 500 gardens. The City of Cincinnati embraced the challenge and launched its own neighborhood pollinator garden challenge in March, as part of its Year of Living Sustainably. Clifton was named the neighborhood winner of this challenge with 22 registered pollinator gardens.

Only two months after launching the Plant for Pollinators Challenge, the Zoo reached its goal of 500 pollinator gardens registered! In fact, the community stepped up and more than 800 pollinator gardens have been registered to-date.

The Plant for Pollinators Challenge is an easy way to build crucial habitats for pollinators and add beauty and blooms all season long. “A healthy population of pollinators improves the health of all plants, which support all wildlife and human beings, supplying us with food, habitat, and a livable planet,” said Scott Beuerlein, Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden’s Manager of Botanical Garden Outreach.
CREW: Ocelot

CREW scientists, in collaboration with colleagues at the Arizona Sonora Desert Museum and the El Paso Zoo, produced two litters of ocelot kittens following artificial insemination (AI) with frozen semen in March. These AI births represent the culmination of 25 years of research by CREW’s Director of Animal Research, Dr. Bill Swanson, who produced the first (and until now only) ocelot kitten from AI with frozen semen at the Dallas Zoo in 1995. Since then, CREW has improved its AI strategies for felids by modifying protocols for semen cryopreservation, ovarian synchronization and laparoscopic insemination.

Small cats, including the ocelot, have received relatively little attention compared to larger cat species, with limited information available on their ecology or conservation status in the wild. Under CREW’s leadership, reproductive sciences are playing a critical role in helping address the conservation and management challenges associated with maintaining these imperiled small cat species within zoos, and possibly in the wild in future years.

Conservation Education Initiative

Education has been a principle component of the Zoo’s mission for over 50 years. Each year the Zoo reaches more than 350,000 students and educators with programming built around the plants and animals that thrive on our 81-acre campus.

From across the globe to our own backyards, the Zoo team knows that education and conservation are intimately intertwined. The Zoo participates in more than 30 different field conservation projects around the world and uses robust and sophisticated breeding programs to propagate species and preserve genetic biodiversity.

Wildlife conservation isn’t just about saving eagles or tigers, it is also about protecting the natural systems that support human society. Conservation needs a bigger fan base, and zoos play the leading role in engaging the public with wildlife. Which is why our most important work is in public education, getting folks to care about animals and play a role in protecting their future.
Polar bears are the focus of one of CREW’s four Signature Projects. Since 2007, CREW scientists have monitored 63 polar bears at 30 North American institutions to better understand female cyclicity, male reproductive seasonality, and the long-term effects of contraceptives. They have established methodologies for semen collection and cryopreservation and performed the world’s first polar bear artificial insemination (AI) in 2012.

Yet polar bears have a low birthrate, creating urgency if this iconic species is to survive. Of the 63 polar bears monitored, only six females have produced cubs, despite breeding behavior being observed with all pairs. CREW scientists are actively working to develop a pregnancy test based on a single fecal sample. One of CREW’s latest efforts involves collecting tens of thousands of fecal samples from polar bears in zoos across the United States and Canada, making our Zoo the proud owner of the world’s largest polar bear poop repository. In order to differentiate feces from multiple bears, non-toxic glitters and dyes are added into the animals’ food, resulting in easily detected differences in the samples collected.

Most people will never see a polar bear in the wild, but approximately 181 million people visit zoos each year. Zoo polar bears act as Arctic ambassadors for their wild cousins, helping to communicate the messages of conservation and climate change to broad audiences.

Thanks to a $244,000 grant from the Institute of Museum and Library Services (IMLS), scientists from CREW will continue their work toward unlocking the secrets of polar bear reproduction. This IMLS award will allow CREW scientists to continue building the world’s first polar bear sperm bank; determine the age and factors influencing sexual maturity; and employ new technologies to develop a pregnancy test for this species. Ongoing learning about the reproductive physiology of this species leads to enhanced care for polar bears in human care. Additionally, insight gained from studying zoo bears may be applicable to their wild cousins.
HORTICULTURE

SUSTAINABLE FUTURE
We believe modeling sustainable practices is just as important as inspiring visitors with wildlife. That’s why we are working toward Net Zero Water, Waste and Energy by 2025. That means our Zoo plans to be the first zoo in the world to produce more power on its properties than it consumes; we will capture and recycle stormwater for 100% of our non-drinking water needs; and we will send zero waste to the landfill.

Paving the Way

The Zoo’s commitment to net zero waste by 2025 includes more solar on all properties, more rainwater collection, more composting and less overall waste. Water conservation is well underway with efforts yielding an 80% reduction of water consumption, saving more than 1.5 billion gallons of water and reducing the Zoo’s energy usage. Paired with simple actions like upgrading light bulbs and installing a 1.6 megawatt solar array in our parking lot, the Zoo staff is dedicated to leveraging every tactic available to lowering our footprint on this earth by reducing our use of natural resources in our own backyard.

Bowyer Farm Browse

Our sustainability initiative reaches beyond Zoo boundaries to Bowyer Farm in Warren County, where we’re growing food for our animals. Currently we grow “browse” - birch, willow, hackberry and other species - which is collected for distribution at the Zoo. Hay and straw are also farmed at the site. Our goal is to grow all food sources for our animals by 2025.

LEEDing the Way

The Zoo has been LEEDing the way in sustainable building practices for more than a decade and has built an impressive list of green awards and accomplishments. It earned the first LEED Silver certification in Cincinnati in 2006, the first LEED Platinum in the city in 2009, and was the first Zoo in the world and project in Ohio to receive Living Building Challenge recognition for its Painted Dog Valley habitat. In November 2018 the Zoo achieved Platinum LEED certification once again for its new indoor Gorilla World habitat. Nearly half of all building products used were manufactured using recycled materials and 44% came from local suppliers.
The Cincinnati Zoo & Botanical Garden continues to educate students of all ages. From toddlers in Zoo Camp to young adults in Zoo Academy – the two-year college preparatory program located on Zoo grounds – and all the way to the adult wildlife enthusiasts young at heart, the Zoo continues to inspire and educate guests with wildlife every day.

Zoo Troop For All

The Cincinnati Zoo is always looking for ways to connect our community and their families with wildlife and wild places. This is where Zoo Troop comes in. As one of the Cincinnati Zoo’s top Education programs, Zoo Troop is not your typical extracurricular activity. This four-week series teaches children to understand and respect the world around them. With age-appropriate classes for toddlers up through 8th graders, the program is designed to develop curiosity, create empathy, encourage healthy social skills, and grow self-esteem – all while receiving a top-notch Zoo experience. Zoo Troop aims to deliver these important life skills through exploration, up-close animal encounters, and fun! Participants are immersed in educational and wildlife-rich experiences designed to target the growth stages and develop knowledge and lifelong skills. Toddlers practice skills such as counting, sharing, and making new friends, while 7th and 8th graders practice their skills in scientific classification using scientific tools and observations. Zoo Troop is all about whole-child development. While learning about wildlife, we challenge kids to work together, be confident, get outside, problem solve, and so much more! Kids and families look forward to seeing each other week after week and many of the children leave having made memories, bonds with their peers, and lifelong friends. Zoo Troop is a unique functional environmental education program that starts and sustains youth on their journey toward developing the skills needed to become productive, forward-thinking, action-oriented, ecology aware citizens.
